Faculty Positions in Health Services Research and Aging

Specifically Health outcomes and Quality of Care/Quality of Life

The Faculty of Nursing at the University of Alberta is recruiting two tenure track faculty positions: a junior (e.g., assistant professor) individual and an early mid-career (e.g., associate professor) individual both in the aging area and focused on: Health Outcomes and Quality of Care/Quality of Life. We are seeking highly productive individuals with a strong grounding in the quantitative sciences, e.g., epidemiology, quantitative sociology, biostatistics, and in mixed methods. Specifically, we are seeking individuals experienced in conducting clinical trials. Experience in improvement and implementation science methods or working with large databases are assets, as is, a focus on improving quality of care and life for older adults with later stages of dementia. Completion of successful postdoctoral training will be an advantage.

These two positions are being recruited to the programmatic area of the Faculty of Nursing's Tier 1 Canada Research Chair <https://www.ualberta.ca/nursing/about/contact-us-and-people/academic-listing/carole-estabrooks> and will be part of a strong mentorship and capacity building program.

The position offers a competitive salary commensurate with qualifications, a comprehensive benefits package, an attractive start-up package, significant ongoing research support, and relocation assistance.

This competition will remain open until suitable candidates are found.

The Faculty of Nursing at the University of Alberta is one of the top nursing faculties in Canada and one of the largest in the country. Our priorities include:
